University to pay in discrimination suit

□ Man may be granted a position in the journalism department after winning a reverse discrimination suit against the University.

By DARLA WARNOCK
The BG News

TOLEDO -- It's been four years since Jack Hartman applied for a teaching position at Bowling Green State University.

He got his "interview" for a position just before spring break and he may be granted the position within the weeks to come.

That is, if the University does not have anything to say about it.

An eight member, all-white jury ruled in favor of Hartman in a reverse discrimination suit heard in U.S. District Court March 3-6. They granted him damages in the amount of $122,500.

Administration

Jurors deliberated for nearly eight hours before arriving at the decision. It is up to Judge James Carr to decide if Hartman should be granted a position in the journalism department at the University.

Hartman applied for a "minority position" in the department in April of 1994 and claimed the reason he was not considered was because he was a white male. The position was granted to a black female.

After filing complaints with the Ohio Civil Rights Commission and a previous case in federal court, Hartman decided to pursue his case once more with Toledo civil rights attorney Harland Britz.

He was not granted an interview for the position and was not informed he did not receive it until July of 1994. He was finally granted an interview - only in federal court instead of at the University, Hartman said.

Hartman, 52, said he wants to make clear he has no ill feelings towards the University and is interested solely in fair treatment and how BGSU treats "its own."

City enforces 'zero tolerance'

□ City police plan to work with downtown bar owners to help control escalating violence.

By SARAH BEDNARSKI
The BG News

As a result of an increase in violence in downtown Bowling Green, the Bowling Green Police Department has issued a "Zero Tolerance Operation."

Under the adopted policy, the department is sponsoring an educational class for bar owners and employees. It will cover such topics as alcohol awareness and liability issues.

According to Thomas Votava,

Campus Police

police chief, the department is taking a stance against violence and wants the bar owners to join them. He said the fighting is not out of control but does pose a danger to the community.

Votava noted that young people are prompting these fights and that most of the individuals are from outside of the campus and city communities.

"(The individuals) have no vested interest in the community," Votava said. "The violence has been sporadic and not an epidemic. It hasn't gotten to that point yet."

"Taking control of the situation early may prevent the problem from escalating to something bigger," stated police lieutenant Brad Conner. He added that by holding the classes they hope owners will better understand their responsibilities.

"The Ohio Department of Liquor Enforcement agency will discuss liquor rights with the owners," he said. "A local attorney will come in to talk about liability issues."

Bar owners will learn about the possible consequences of serving an already intoxicated person as well as someone who is underage, according to Votava.

In addition to the classes, Conner said a new shift change is be-

Faculty debates cultural issues

□ The Faculty Senate and Office of Diversity Initiatives will co-sponsor a debate intended to increase cultural sensitivity.

By MELISSA NAYMIK
The BG News

Trying to incorporate cultural diversity into a lecture may pose a problem for some instructors or professors.

In order to help address that problem the first faculty debate will be held today and will focus on cultural issues. The debate will take place in the McFall Gallery, from 2:30 p.m. to 4:30 p.m.

The idea to have a faculty debate came from Lorna Gonsalves-Pinto, research associate for the provost office, in the fall semester. Gonsalves-Pinto asked the faculty senate if they would be interested in co-sponsoring a program on diversity.

Bob Holmes, former faculty senate chairman, liked the idea and believed the senate executive committee and senate should take part in this event along with the Office of Diversity Initiatives, their co-sponsor.

Veronica Gold, chairwoman for faculty senate, is really happy that the faculty senate will be co-sponsoring this event.

"Personally, I hope that this will increase my sensitivity about other cultures and ultimately improve my communication in and outside of the classroom," Gold said.

There will be two teams of five to 10 people. The debate will be informal and should last approximately one hour, followed by an hour of discussion. Within the debate itself, three main argu-

Uncontrolled fire threatens rain forest, homes

□ Political arguments continue over the severity of a fire that has destroyed over 1 million acres of land and continues to wreak havoc.

The Associated Press

BOA VISTA, Brazil -- A 3-month-old fire is raging out of control in Brazil's remote northern Amazon, devouring large sections of savanna and lapping at the forest home of the Yanomami Indians, the world's largest Stone Age tribe.

Gov. Neudo Campos of Roraima state said the blaze at one point reached 12 miles inside the Yanomami reservation, although he couldn't say how much forest had been burned.

Heavy smoke and low rivers shrunken by months of drought hindered access to the region, which is home to about 9,000 Yanomami. About 11,000 more live across the border in Venezuela.

"We have lost control of the situation," Kleber Cerquinho, head of the state Civil Defense bureau, admitted in a radio interview.

Less than 1 inch of rain has fallen this year in Roraima, a wedge of land between Venezuela and Guyana. The unusual dry spell is attributed to El Nino, a warming of the waters in the Pacific that changes weather patterns worldwide.

Roraima's vegetation dried to tinder, and the traditional brush-burning by farmers and ranchers has swept over savanna and pasture lands that cover much of the state. Only about one-fifth of the burned area is forest.

There is only one, unconfirmed report of a fatality: a man killed when he was hit by a burning branch.

Campos said Monday that some 1.5 million acres had been burned, or about 3 percent of the state. That was way below earlier official estimates of 25 percent.

The fire advances at a pace of six miles a day, and firefighters are almost powerless to stop it, Campos said.

Unless something is done soon, the flames will threaten virgin rain forest and the villages of the Yanomami. The Associated Press was not immediately able to obtain permission to enter the reservation to assess the threat the fire poses to the tribe.

For centuries, the Yanomami lived in virtual isolation, hunting and fishing with bow and arrows. They have no written language and count only up to two - anything more is "wahoro," or "many."

But in the 1980s, a gold rush brought prospectors flooding into the Yanomami's 25-million-acre reservation. The outsiders brought guns and diseases that have riddled the population and corrupted traditional lifestyles.

LETTERS

During the past few semesters, our campus community has come together, on various occasions, to engage in dialogues and to participate in activities centered around the issue of diversity. Several individuals, offices and organizations have played instrumental roles in promoting an awareness and understanding of diversity issues. The Human Relations Commission of BGSU believes that paying due attention to diversity in our learning and living environments is a key component in the process of promoting positive human relations; one which enhances our recruitment and retention potential and sends a clear message to current and future students: diversity is everyone's business at BGSU.

In line with one of our University's core values which underscores pride in a job well done, the Human Relations Commission seeks to recognize and applaud the efforts of individuals and groups that have made a significant contribution to the enhancement of diversity awareness and promotion of positive human relations on our campus. To this end, the campus community is invited to nominate individuals and groups for their special efforts and accomplishments.

This award is presented in honor of Dr. Miguel Ornelas who, before his untimely death, was an active HRC member and Director of Affirmative Action at BGSU. Dr. Ornelas served as the head of the Ohio Hispanic Institute of Opportunity and was the recipient of the first Hispanic Award from Project Search. The award will be presented by Dr. Conee Ornelas on April 16, 1998, prior to the speech delivered by economist and syndicated columnist, Dr. Julianne Malveaux in 101 Olscamp Hall. On behalf of the Human Relations Commission, I invite the campus community to assist us in identifying and recognizing deserving individuals and groups.

Sincerely,

Lorna Gonsalves-Pinto

Titanic: the price of pop culture

Some people I know think I'm a party pooper, that all I like to do is complain and ruin the fun and all that razzmatazz. Maybe it's true. I always try to allow that space for other people's opinions. But in my defense, I prefer to think of it as refusing to take the wholly optimistic view of things while ignoring what reality still lingers behind the sunshiny images.

Maybe that's not true, though. Maybe the truth lies somewhere in between what I think of my view and what others think.

Regardless, that's my best explanation for why it is that I've felt so incredibly bitter toward this whole Titanic phenomenon. I've never seen the movie and don't plan on ever seeing it. When it first opened, I thought to myself, "Why the hell would I want to see this movie?" Let's see what we can see just gleaning what we know from Hollywood and from previews.

We've got Leonardo, some mooney-faced starlet and a slickster-looking fella who I've liked in other movies, who can easily play bad-guy roles. It's about the Titanic, which, unless I was asleep during that history class, sunk when it hit an iceberg. Hmmm, okay, so Leo hooks up with mooney-face, they're happy, slickster tries to mess up the romance, ship sinks, slickster probably dies deservedly and poor Leo (male hero) somehow dies while saving his mooney-face. No thanks.

Then another part of me, more nerdy, less of a pop culture nut, pointed out that good ol' James Cameron, whose work I've enjoyed in the past, shelled out more than 200 million dollars making this film. He even built a ship 90% the size of the original Titanic and then sunk it. Why support 200 million dollars worth of cinema which has a predictable plot and seems to have been driven, not by a need to retell some dramatic story (since the whole account of Leo, mooney-face and slickster is fictional), but by a simple desire to make it look as real as possible, even though we all know it's fake?

That was before Titanic started breaking records, packing in theaters, providing me with evening images of pre-teen and teen girls ooh-ing and ah-ing and bragging about how many times they'd seen their hunky Leo freeze his butt off in ice water and die. It also made me wonder how many true fans realized that Leo's been around for awhile, making his debut in the last few seasons of Growing Pains, then doing way better films like What's Eating Gilbert Grape? and not-so-better ones like The Quick and The Dead. So does Brian have some sort of grudge against poor Leo and his destiny-bound ship? No. If people want to shell out loads of money to see this movie, go ahead. I've paid to see my fair share of crappy movies, so I can't claim cinematic superiority.

What bothers me here is that in North America this film has grossed 471 million dollars at last count. We can probably safely assume it'll gross more than 500 million in North America before it's finished its run. The producers of the film quickly point out that it's now passed Star Wars as the highest grossing film of all time, although that's in non-inflation adjusted dollars. So overall, with 200 million being spent to make the film, 500 million being spent to see the film, 700 million dollars has been spent one way or another for one lousy piece of cinema.

This sort of thing is what makes me sick. Americans complain and whine about school systems being screwed, about law enforcement being corrupt, about the environment going to hell, about homelessness, about every other damned problem which is a true problem, and then almost in the same breath they'll go support a 200 million dollar venture with 500 million of their own dollars. When Red Cross comes asking for money or some homeless guy or gal asks for spare change in the street, what do we do? Turn the other way, ignore it, try to make up an excuse as to why we can't give anything. 700 million could give each homeless person 350 dollars. How many of us would think to offer a complete stranger 350 dollars? But how many of us think twice about shelling out money for a multi-million dollar waste?

Waste your money, throw it away, do whatever. But don't try to tell me you care about this and that and feel so bad because actions truly do speak louder than words.

MALE PATTERN

Censorship for financial gain

If you had read the lead story in The Sunday Telegraph last week, you would have thought that the World Health Organization withheld data that seemed to deny a link between second-hand smoking and cancer. If you read the Monday edition of The Guardian (another London paper, and a rival to the Telegraph), on the other hand, you would come to the conclusion that the British and American Tobacco Company had somewhat distorted the evidence gathered by the WHO and was practicing a misinformation campaign of its own.

The fact that I came across both papers made me think about times when we don't get another angle on a story. Newspapers are very fallible, and the possibility for error multiplies as the readers become more distant from the source of the news. Theoretically, a reader of The BG News could ring Dr. Ribeiro to see if some new plan or another was really to be implemented. More practically, a BG News reader would see the effects of the new plan or announcement on campus or in the community.

When talking about something like the World Health Organization, fact checking becomes much more difficult. We must rely heavily on media organizations to give us, if not "the truth", a large body of knowledge to draw from and possibly, to draw our own conclusions from.

What we know of something so volatile as the former Yugoslavia or as complex as the scientific research on second-hand smoke is taken mostly from a very few journalists and editors who have the resources or technical knowledge to decode such things and to try to put them in perspective.

The system is flawed and mistakes are made. Yet if I thought the media was fundamentally erroneous, or deliberately deceptive, I would certainly hightail it out of journalism and major in something else. I believe that journalists, working together or separately, but with the common goal of arriving at some type of "truth" or "fact," can do a lot of good for society.

The profit motive, however, is creeping into the media—or rather, it is flooding in. What happens when journalists must think about money before thinking about what "facts" to report? Working in the non-profit sector, we at the BG News have a certain luxury—while we do take into consideration what the readers want, we are free to express a wider range of opinions and ideas than, say, The Washington Post. I remember last year when the News group picture was taken—I was astonished that I didn't know half of the people who showed up. They were the advertising department. They did their job, and we did ours—and never the twain shall meet.

This is in contrast to the highly competitive global corporations that are sucking up an increasing share of major media outlets. Perhaps you have heard of a recent scandal that put fear into the hearts of liberals and populists alike.

Chris Patten, the last Royal Governor of Hong Kong, had signed a book deal with Harper Collins, one of the many companies owned by Rupert Murdoch. Murdoch has his fingers in so many pies that I couldn't possibly list them all here (or even be aware of them all). Murdoch is also looking to spread the tentacles of his news organizations into China.

It appears that somehow, contrary to accepted editorial policy, Murdoch got a look at the first draft of Patten's book, which apparently had some not-so-complimentary comments about the Chinese regime. Thus, the story goes, Murdoch ordered the Harper Collins editors not to publish it.

Furthermore, another allegation was made to the effect that Murdoch also ordered the Sunday Times (another London paper, owned by Murdoch, of course) not to accept the book to print in serialized form in order to bolster the contention that Patten's writings were somehow subpar.

This charge appears to have less weight than the first one (Patten settled with Harper Collins for an undisclosed sum of money), but that's only according to a report I read in the Sunday Times.

This all might sound very confusing, but what is clear is this: a very powerful man engaged in censorship for financial gain. It's disappointing, but not wholly unexpected, that Murdoch, who usually preaches free speech, would practice censorship in his own house—and this to please the repressive Chinese government!

Of course, the fact that this whole story has come to light and been reported on extensively should give us some hope that putting money above "fact-gathering" or honest expressions of opinion is still looked upon in disdain.

However, reading the accounts of Murdoch's behavior certainly led me to think about all the cases of censorship that are not reported...

Identification picture office moves to Administration

The University's photo identification office moved last week from the Commons Building to Administration Building 132.

According to Joe Martini, office of the Bursar, the reason for the move is to make the office more student accessible. He said the change also allowed them to staff the office with more faculty.

The telephone for the office is still 372-6081. Hours are Monday through Friday, 8 a.m.-5 p.m.

MIR

Astronauts get more food

MOSCOW -- A space ferry carrying food, water, fuel -- and a new set of wrenches to open a stubborn lock on the Mir -- headed Monday for a rendezvous with the Russian space station.

The Mir crew -- Russian cosmonauts Talgat Musabayev and Nikolai Budarin and American astronaut Andrew Thomas -- went to bed Monday afternoon to rest before the docking, scheduled for early Tuesday morning (7:30 p.m. EST Monday), said Irina Manshilina, a spokeswoman for Mission Control.

The new set of tools replaces three wrenches broken by Musabayev and Budarin while they were trying to open a tough bolt on the station's exit hatch.

The problem forced cancellation of a March 3 spacewalk to install a support beam on a solar panel damaged in the space station's June collision with a cargo ship.

Mission Control has said the duo will try again on April 1, using the new tools.

The two Russians are expected to make at least five spacewalks before their return to Earth in August. Apart from strengthening the solar panel, they are to replace one of Mir's orientation engines, which keeps the space station aligned.

The Progress M-38 cargo ship is carrying a new propulsion engine to replace the old one.

Last month, Mir celebrated 12 years in orbit -- despite being designed to last for only five years. Mir lurched from one breakdown and accident to another last year; this year has been much calmer.

Russian space officials want to keep Mir in orbit at least until next year, when a new international space station is put aloft.

POULTRY

Local farm plans to triple size of egg operation

BOWLING GREEN -- Wood County leaders say they didn't know a poultry farm was planning to triple the size of its hen-egg operation there until after it was approved.

At issue is the planned expansion of Hertzfeld Poultry Farms in rural Grand Rapids Township, about 10 miles west of Bowling Green.

Hertzfeld is expanding its operation from 500,000 to nearly 1.5 million hens. The Ohio Environmental Protection Agency's Surface Water and Solid Waste Division issued a permit last year but Wood County officials said Monday they did not find out about the expansion until this month.

The expansion comes without input from neighbors, township or county officials, according to County Commissioner Jim Carter. He added that there were no public hearings and the EPA never contacted the county health department to discuss the possibility of health-related problems.

"The EPA did not have to hold a public hearing before issuing a permit," said Ed Hammit, district chief of the agency's Bowling Green office.

In the future, however, the EPA will contact Wood County officials about planned farm expansions, he said.

BOMB

Gulf War bomb explodes in Iraq

BAGHDAD, Iraq -- Five children were killed Monday when a bomb from the 1991 Gulf War exploded in southern Iraq, the official Iraqi News Agency reported.

The bomb went off in the al-Hussein neighborhood of Basra, a city 270 miles southeast of Baghdad, the capital.

Two of the victims were 11, two were 14 and one was 13, INA said, calling the bomb a remnant of the "vicious Zionist and American aggression on Iraq."

On Jan. 25, a similar explosion killed 21 women and children in Basra.

There are frequent reports of deaths and injuries caused by bombs dropped on Iraq during the Gulf War, which ousted Iraqi forces from their occupation of neighboring Kuwait.

Top Army officer demoted

The Associated Press

FORT BELVOIR, Va. -- Sgt. Maj. Gene McKinney was spared a prison sentence Monday and busted down one rank for obstruction of justice after pleading with a military jury to let him retire "with some form of honor."

The Army had asked for a six-month prison sentence and a demotion to the lowest rank, private.

The same jury that acquitted McKinney, once the Army's highest-ranking enlisted man, on Friday of crudely pressuring six military women for sex, imposed the sentence after two hours of deliberations.

McKinney was convicted on only one of 19 counts, obstruction of justice, for urging one of his accusers to lie to investigators.

Also Monday, McKinney's first accuser, Sgt. Maj. Brenda Hoster, was served with a $1.5 million libel suit filed by McKinney alleging that she lied in interviews when she first went public with her story last year.

Ms. Hoster, now retired, claimed McKinney groped her during a business trip to Hawaii.

McKinney, 47, stood at attention and showed no emotion when his sentence was read. His wife, Wilhemina, sat stoically behind him.

"I would ask you to allow Wilhemina and I to move on with some honor in terms of the 29 years of service I have provided and the 25 she has provided since we have been married," he had asked the jury.

"Whatever the outcome of this thing is, Wilhemina and I have said we're going to continue to do what we do best, which is to serve young people and soldiers, whether in uniform or civilian life," McKinney said.

"I'd like to do that with some form of honor."

The sentence, which must be approved by senior Army leadership, will likely cut his retirement benefits. McKinney, who had already submitted his retirement request, will leave the Army as a master sergeant instead of a sergeant major.

As he left the courtroom, McKinney was asked if he was satisfied with the sentence.

"Well, let's just say we're going to move on with our lives in spite of this long, extensive investigation," McKinney told reporters. "We did OK."

His wife added: "Thank God for prayers."

Four of the six women who had accused McKinney of groping them or crudely pressuring them for sex sat together in the courtroom. They expressed no emotion at his sentence and made no comment afterward.

Ms. Hoster was not in the courtroom Monday. Another of McKinney's accusers, Maj. Michelle Gunzelman, is stationed in Germany.

McKinney's attorney, Charles Gittins, told the jury that McKinney and his wife have suffered enough in the year since the accusations were made public, and imprisoning McKinney and reducing his rank would be "overkill."

Outside court, Gittins insisted, as he did during the trial, that the women concocted their stories out of revenge.

"We demonstrated, I believe conclusively ... that the women were liars, cheats and frauds," said Gittins. "We were left with an obstruction of justice charge that the government essentially manufactured."

A tape of the call made by the woman was played for the jury during the six-week trial.

In the tape recording, McKinney is heard telling Staff Sgt. Christine Fetrow: "Just tell them that we talked. ... No inappropriateness at all, just that we talked."

Ms. Fetrow testified that McKinney pursued her for sex for more than two years, and her accusations accounted for 10 of the 19 charges against McKinney.

Ms. Fetrow said that in the telephone call, he was urging her to lie to investigators, but McKinney testified he was merely encouraging her to tell the truth.

McKinney, the Army's first black to serve as Sergeant Major of the Army, was removed from the powerful post last year. Had he been convicted on all 19 counts, McKinney could have faced up to 55 years in prison.

Publishers to alter sweepstakes slogan

The Associated Press

NEWARK, N.J. -- Mailboxes will no longer be stuffed with letters featuring Ed McMahon and Dick Clark that say "You're our newest winner."

Under an agreement announced Monday, American Family publishers will stop promoting its sweepstakes with that slogan, and pay a total of $1.25 million to 25 states.

The company has "finally been stopped in the misleading scam they have been running all these years," said Michigan Attorney General Frank J. Kelley, part of a multistate task force investigating AFP's practices.

Under the agreement, the company cannot tell consumers they are "winners" or have already "won" a prize unless that has happened. AFP also must tell consumers that they do not have to buy a magazine subscription to enter the sweepstakes.

The company's promotions feature McMahon and Clark and are mailed to 200 million people each year. The company is half owned by Time Inc. Home Entertainment, a subsidiary of Time Warner Inc., and half owned by private investors.

In January, an 88-year-old man from California flew to Tampa, Florida for the second time in the mistaken belief that he could collect his sweepstakes winnings there. The second time he was confused by an AFP promotion that said: "You're our newest $11 million winner."

AFP admits no wrongdoing in the agreement, which does not prevent the states from suing them.

On Friday, the company announced its own program that goes "above and beyond the agreement," spokeswoman Margot DeWitt said. It promises to display prominently the "no purchase necessary" and money-back guarantee.

The agreement, signed March 10, does not include several states that have already sued the Jersey City-based company, including Connecticut, Florida and Indiana. Also not included are South Carolina, which is planning to sue, and Maryland, where a class-action lawsuit has been filed.

These states participating in the agreement will get $50,000 from AFP: Arkansas, Arizona, California, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Kansas, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nebraska, New Mexico, New Jersey, Nevada, North Carolina, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Washington and Wisconsin.

Seven other states and the District of Columbia were part of the agreement but will receive no money.

ODOT budgets Ohio interstate repairs

The Associated Press

DELAWARE, Ohio -- The emphasis in highway construction and repair projects this year will be on maintaining Ohio's aging interstate system, the Department of Transportation said Monday.

The $1.1 billion the department will spend on projects this year is about the same as last year, but only $200 million will be available for new construction. Most of the new projects will help relieve congested highways, said Jack Marchbanks, ODOT's deputy director for District 6, which covers central Ohio. The department is planning 68 projects through the end of the year.

The bulk of the money -- $705.1 million -- will go to maintenance projects. Another $146.2 million will be spent on small bridges, such as freeway overpasses, and $48.7 million will be spent on major bridges. Fixing what already exists gets priority over new construction, which will wind down until 2002, when major new road building will end, Marchbanks said.

"We have the fifth-highest traffic volume in the United States and the fourth-largest interstate system. We have a lot of interstate to maintain. That is our focus," Marchbanks said.

Traffic tie-ups are expected in Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati, on Interstate 75 in the Toledo and Lima areas and on Interstate 70 in eastern Ohio during the coming months.

Although projects in northwest Ohio and southeast Ohio are planned, the state still hears complaints that Cincinnati, Cleveland and Columbus get all the construction, Marchbanks said.

But Columbus, for instance, is growing faster than other parts of the state, he said. Two major projects, the widening of the city's outerbelt and the rebuilding of a downtown innerbelt, have been under way since last summer.

"We are looking at being as objective as possible," Marchbanks said. "Yes, central Ohio does have a huge share of the statewide pie, but at the same time we do have a huge share of the growth."

But Rep. Lynn Olman, R-Maumee, said too much emphasis is put on development and not enough on safety when determining which projects get the go-ahead and which ones are left on the back burner.

He called the section of U.S. 24 that runs from Toledo to the Indiana border one of the most dangerous in the state. He said the highway, most of it just two lanes, is overburdened because of increasing development in the area.

Jack Marchbanks
ODOT's deputy director for central Ohio

"We have a disproportionate number of traffic deaths," stressed Olman, who recently won House approval of an amendment that would strengthen a construction review council that rates projects for ODOT.

"Forty percent of its traffic is trucks. That is the single-highest proportion of trucks to cars of any two-lane highway in Ohio," he said.

He received all three of his degrees from the University.

"This issue was between me and a very small number of people at the top of Bowling Green State University who behaved illegally," Hartman said. "We can all go back to making it the best that it can be."

He is hoping he will be a part of the University by obtaining the position he had applied for at a base salary of $65,000.

Britz said he was pleased with the decision given by the jury, although he is not confident the case is over quite yet.

"These cases don't end when the verdict comes in," Britz said. "They may appeal."

According to University spokesman Cliff Boutelle, the University has not decided if an appeal will be filed.

"I have not heard anything to that effect," Boutelle said. "It takes a while to sort through these things -- the whole thing has to be reviewed."

Hartman said he believes in the University and is ready to take on any position which may be offered to him -- regardless of the circumstances of his arrival. He said his main concern is teaching, which would not be affected by any work environment he may be subjected to.

"I'd like to believe that the Falcon flies high above the courtroom," Hartman said as tears dripped down his face. "It is my hope that this matter can be concluded in the next few days and all of us individually can be better from the experience."

ing implemented in the department. Officers will serve in 10-hour shifts which will overlap to provide extra officers on the streets and patrolling the downtown area.

"We want to take control of the problems early," Conner emphasized.

The first class was March 16 and the department will schedule more in the future, according to Votava. He said the class will be interactive so owners can ask questions and comment on different scenarios.

"We have a positive outlook on the class and hope for a positive result," he affirmed.

Votava said they completed their first night of "zero tolerance" Mar. 5. He said officers and liquor enforcement agents visited 12 establishments.

As a result, eight individuals and one establishment were cited. Votava said the citations included furnishing alcoholic beverages to underage persons, underage possession, and open container. Other citations included possession of marijuana and drug paraphernalia.

Bojangles was cited for selling and furnishing beer to a minor.

ments will take place for and against the topic of discussion. "The question posed: 'Is multicultural awareness a prerequisite criterion for being an educated person?' The goal is to have the faculty and the audience play a role in presenting a topic on how to present diversity in classrooms," Gonsalves-Pinto said.

If any faculty member is interested in participating, they can attend the debate, Gonsalves-Pinto said.

"I hope that this debate will be the first in a series of debates which will inform and engage the campus community where issues of race and other dimensions of diversity are concerned," she said.

This type of debate has been done in the past with the Board of Trustees at the University involving the president, vice presidents and students, as well as at other universities across the United States.

"I think it is really healthy and an important topic to discuss because teachers deal with different cultures and they need to know about these different cultures," Gold said.

AMAZON

The state is distributing 30,000 food baskets to fire victims, including 3,000 in Indian reservations that cover 55 percent of the state. But most went to small farmers who have lost their homes and crops to the fire.

Meanwhile, Campos said, firefighters and army soldiers have built 6,000 small reservoirs and are digging wells to get water to combat the blaze.

The state government sought help in nearby Venezuela and asked for federal money to rent 22 Russian and U.S. firefighting helicopters, Campos said. But the helicopters weren't available, and Brazil's Environmental Protection Agency said they wouldn't be much good anyway.

"I suspended the talks, and I hope that means (the federal government) will give us the conditions to fight the fire," Campos said at a news conference in Boa Vista, 2,100 miles northwest of Rio de Janeiro.

Political wrangling has delayed concrete action. Campos says federal bureaucrats don't care about poor, remote Roraima, while some suspect the state inflated the reports of destruction to obtain federal loans.

The smoke hangs thickly over Boa Vista, a city of 150,000 that grew up around gold mining. The pungent smell hits visitors even before they get off the plane.

Campos says the fire in the prairie might consume an additional 250,000 acres and then burn itself out. But there's no telling what will happen when it hits the rain forest.

About 12 percent of Brazil's 2-million-square mile rain forest already has been razed by loggers, ranchers and farmers. The government says destruction reached record levels in 1995 before finally leveling off in the last two years.

Although El Nino is fading, its effects may be felt for years, experts say.

"Think of the forest as a sponge," says David Nepstad, a U.S. scientist with the Woods Hole Research Center. "In 1997 it was wrung dry, and this year we're not seeing the kind of rainfall that will replenish it. So it looks like 1998 could be even worse."

Freemen jury selection begins

The Associated Press

BILLINGS, Mont. — A federal judge banished four cursing and shouting Freemen to holding cells Monday as jury selection began in their trial on charges stemming from their 1996 standoff on the Montana plains.

Three of the defendants had to be dragged in and out of the courtroom by federal marshals because they refused to walk and a fourth was pushed in a wheelchair. They were ejected after disrupting the courtroom.

Two other defendants were allowed to remain, but they defiantly refused to participate even though they insisted they were representing themselves.

The six are the first Freemen to face trial in connection with the anti-government militants' 81-day standoff with the FBI.

A panel of 100 prospective jurors was summoned to the federal courthouse and questioned into the late afternoon.

"My job here is to find 12 people who can assure us under oath they can be completely fair to both sides and won't be affected by what they have seen or heard outside this courtroom," said U.S. District Judge John C. Coughenour.

That turned out not to be a problem. By day's end a jury of five women and seven men had been chosen to hear the case, with opening statements to begin Tuesday.

Only about a half-dozen said they had formed opinions and would be unable to consider the evidence objectively.

As the questioning continued, two defendants — Edwin F. Clark, 47, of Brusett, Mont., and Elwin Ward, 57, of Salt Lake City — sat stoically at the defense table. They refused to stand when the judge entered or left the courtroom, an act of defiance that Coughenour ignored.

The other four defendants were expelled from the courtroom after outbursts.

Jon Barry Nelson, 42, of Marion, Kan., ripped up his nameplate as he was brought to the defense table. Steven C. Hance, 48, and son James E. Hance, 25, both of Charlotte, N.C., cursed the judge and prosecutor. Another son, John R. Hance, 21, also of Charlotte, initially was stoic, but then ripped up his nameplate as well.

All six are charged with being accessories by aiding federal fugitives, other Freemen in the stronghold, to avoid arrest during the standoff. Prosecutors expect the trial to last several weeks.

Vitamin cause of frog deformities

The Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Vitamin A compounds in lake water may be at least partly responsible for frog deformities being found in Minnesota and more than two dozen other states, including Ohio, researchers said Monday.

The lead researcher, David Gardiner of the University of California at Irvine, said he suspected retinoids from the moment the Environmental Protection Agency asked him to look at pictures of deformed frogs about a year ago.

Retinoids are vitamin A compounds and include retinoic acid, a hormone that regulates several key aspects of development in vertebrates. Excess amounts of retinoic acid produce birth defects in humans.

The frogs Gardiner's team studied had one or more leg segments that, instead of being straight, folded nearly in half to produce a "triangulated" appearance. The deformities also included fewer fingers and one bone instead of two in the forearm.

Finding the cause of the deformities is important because scientists believe amphibians may be an early barometer of environmental problems.

Gardiner, a limb development and regeneration specialist, and Bruce Blumberg of the Salk Institute of La Jolla, Calif., found evidence of retinoids in water samples from a Minnesota lake that produced many deformed frogs.

The deformities were consistent with those seen in chickens, mice and other vertebrates exposed to retinoic acid in experiments, they said.

"The reality is it had been there in the literature," Gardiner said. "This is what it looks like when you treat developing vertebrate limbs with retinoic acid; frogs, chickens, whatever."

Though confident of the findings, Gardiner said they were only a starting point. Other factors may contribute to the deformities, he said.

Gardiner and Blumberg will report the new evidence Saturday at a conference in Milwaukee.

Scientists around the country have been trying to unravel the mystery of deformed frogs. Chemicals or parasites were thought to be the culprits elsewhere.

Ramseys want police investigated

The Associated Press

DENVER — A possible grand jury investigation into the slaying of JonBenet Ramsey should also probe police conduct during the past 15 months, lawyers for the girl's parents said Monday.

"In our view, the deliberate leaks of supposedly confidential investigative information as well as outright smears of the Ramseys is serious misconduct," they said.

In a letter to District Attorney Alex Hunter, the lawyers said the Ramseys welcome a grand jury investigation, but want police to have no part in it.

"No sane person would continue to deal with a police department bent on scapegoating them," the letter said.

The letter is the first public comment from the Ramseys since police recommended on Thursday that Hunter convene a grand jury to help investigate the case.

Hunter must analyze evidence and determine whether a grand jury is appropriate. He received the Ramseys' letter Monday, but declined to comment.

A grand jury can be used to obtain sworn testimony, to obtain evidence not available through routine investigation and to seek indictments. Grand jury proceedings, which are secret, are sometimes used to force uncooperative witnesses to testify.

The Ramseys remain under suspicion in connection with the death of their daughter, whose body was found in the family's Boulder home Dec. 26, 1996. John Ramsey found his daughter's body about eight hours after Patsy Ramsey said she found a ransom note demanding $118,000.

The Ramseys have had a tumultuous relationship with police, and late last year refused renewed requests for interviews from Cmdr. Mark Beckner, who was assigned to oversee the case in October. Ramsey attorneys have accused police of focusing only on their clients.

Citing news reports on the case, the letter lambasts police.

"Every important item of evidence and its potential significance has been leaked to the media by police officers," the letter claims.

Police spokeswoman Jennifer Bray had no comment.

Man admits he forged JFK documents

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — A document dealer was arrested Monday on charges he forged papers supposedly proving President Kennedy had an affair with Marilyn Monroe.

Lawrence Cusack III was charged with mail and wire fraud.

Court papers said Cusack defrauded dozens of investors around the country of up to $7 million by selling them ownership shares of letters and notes purportedly written by Kennedy, Robert Kennedy and Miss Monroe.

He provided author Seymour Hersh with documents purportedly showing that Kennedy bought Miss Monroe's silence about the alleged affair by setting up a trust for her mother.

The documents initially formed the basis for a chapter in Hersh's book "The Dark Side of Camelot," but Hersh deleted the chapter before publication last year after their authenticity was challenged.

ABC News, which was producing a documentary based in part on Cusack's papers, hired experts who concluded they were forgeries.

Cusack, 47, claimed to have found 700 documents relating to the Kennedy family, Miss Monroe and Chicago mob boss Sam Giancana in the files of his father, Lawrence Cusack, a lawyer who died in 1985.

Among the items that Cusack is accused of selling were a signed copy of Miss Monroe's will for $145,000 and a document written by Kennedy for $55,000.

Postal Inspector John G. Feiter said in court papers that Cusack admitted forging the documents.

Feiter also said he obtained a notebook of Cusack's that contains "what appear to be practice signatures of other historical figures, namely, George Washington, Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson."

Cusack was arrested at his home in Fairfield, Conn. He could get up to five years in prison and $250,000 in fines.

U.S. Magistrate Judge Henry B. Pitman gave Cusack a $2.5 million personal recognizance bond Monday and ordered him to surrender his passport. Cusack will remain under home detention and must wear an electronic monitoring device.

His next court appearance was scheduled for April 15.

Cusack did not speak to reporters after the 30-minute hearing. His attorney, Harry C. Batchelder Jr., would not comment on the case, but said in court his client was not a flight risk since he has a wife, 3-year-old twins and 16-month-old and 2-week-old children to support.

Dr. Spock dies at 94

The Associated Press

SAN DIEGO -- Dr. Benjamin Spock, who wrote the how-to guide for bringing up the baby boom generation, then was branded the "father of permissiveness" when those youngsters came of age during the turbulent 1960s, has died at 94.

Spock died Sunday at home in La Jolla of respiratory failure. He had suffered a heart attack, a stroke and several bouts of pneumonia in recent years.

No one has had a greater impact on child care in America.

His first book, "Common Sense Book of Baby and Child Care," was published in 1946 at the very start of the post-World War II baby boom and became a bible to millions of parents.

In it, Spock encouraged parents to trust and respect themselves and listen to their children. For example, he told them it is better to feed babies when they want to eat instead of adhering to a strict feeding schedule.

His seemingly simple advice was a revelation for many, and "Baby and Child Care," as it was called in later editions, went on to become the biggest-selling book in the United States after the Bible. It has been translated into 39 languages and sold nearly 50 million copies worldwide.

"He was really the first person to talk about listening to children, which is such a catchphrase now," British psychologist Penelope Leach, author of the best-selling "Your Baby and Child," said from her London office.

Arlene Eisenberg, who co-wrote the best-selling "What to Expect When You're Expecting," said Spock was the first child-care expert who said to parents: "Trust your instincts. Do what you're comfortable with."

"He really made child care focus more on the needs of children rather than convenience of parents," she said.

Some physicians criticized Spock's approach in the 1960s as excessively permissive, and critics said he was responsible for a "Spock-marked" generation of hippies.

Spock joined those youths in protests against nuclear technology and the Vietnam War, even leading a march on the Pentagon in 1967. Vice President Spiro Agnew accused him of corrupting the youth of America; Spock claimed only a "mild influence."

He argued, "What is the use of physicians like myself trying to help parents to bring up children healthy and happy, to have them killed in such numbers for a cause that is ignoble?"

In 1968, Spock was convicted in Boston and sentenced to two years in prison for conspiracy to aid, abet and counsel young men to avoid the draft. The verdict was reversed on appeal.

He ran for president in 1972 as a candidate of the Peoples Party, getting more than 75,000 votes.

Accusing Spock of prompting the youth rebellion was "absurd," said Todd Gitlin, a New York University professor who wrote "The Sixties, Years of Hope, Days of Rage."

"What is true is that the family patterns were changing, partly but not strictly because of the popularity of his book," Gitlin said.

Dr. Marvin Drellich, professor of psychiatry at New York Medical College, said the radical behavior of youth in that era "didn't emerge from Spock's teachings. It was far more a reflection of the social and political climate."

The big-boned, 6-foot-4 Spock said he never meant that children should be allowed to be uncooperative or impolite. He said his basic philosophy was this: "Respect children because they're human beings and they deserve respect, and they'll grow up to be better people."

Born May 2, 1903, in New Haven, Conn., the oldest of six children, Spock attended Yale University, where he joined the crew team and helped win a gold medal at the 1924 Olympics.

BG women get one more game

Falcons fall in NIT opener

Special to The BG News

In an entertaining, high-octane game, the Bowling Green women's basketball team fell to Butler, 95-90, in a first-round Women's NIT game Friday night at Anderson Arena.

The Falcons spotted the visiting Bulldogs a 4-0 lead, then went on a 26-10 run to take a 12-point lead (BG's biggest of the game) midway through the first half.

The Bulldogs, however, scored the game's next 10 points as part of a 14-2 run that tied the contest at 28-28 just four minutes later. BG regained the lead for the remainder of the half, though, and took a 43-40 edge into the break.

In the second half, the Bulldogs, from the Mid-Continent Conference, connected on their first five shots from the floor, and 12 of their first 15. Butler shot .594 in the second half and .556 for the game.

For their part, the Falcons shot .581 in the second stanza and .508 for the game.

The teams combined for 102 points in the second 20 minutes. A Sara Puthoff 3-pointer opened the second-half scoring, but the Bulldogs answered with a Jennifer Marlow trey. The visitors went on a 9-0 run early in the second half to take the lead for good.

Although the Falcons never led in the final 17:15, BG kept the Butler lead in single digits, and closed to two points with 2:40 left. BG still trailed by three points when, with 1:35 left, Marlow banked in a long 3-pointer as the shot clock expired.

Marlow's trey gave BU an 85-79 lead, and the Falcons were forced to foul. The Bulldogs, like BG ranked among the top five nationally in free-throw shooting percentage, went 6-for-7 from the line in the final minute to seal the win.

Marlow and Debbie Benziger led the way for the Bulldogs with 28 points apiece. Marlow, who was 10-of-11 from the field, made all four of her 3-point attempts and added a game-best nine assists.

BG's "big three" of Charlotta Jones, Puthoff and Jacki Raterman scored 22, 22 and 20 points, respectively, in the loss. The Falcons committed just 11 turnovers while forcing Butler into 19 miscues, but the Bulldogs held a commanding 40-27 edge on the boards.

Valpo still defying midnight

The Associated Press

VALPARAISO, Ind. — This is the kind of place where everyone knows the basketball players by their first names.

"If you've ever talked to Bryce," said the clerk in the printing shop, "he's the nicest guy you could ever meet."

It's the kind of place that anyone who's ever dribbled a basketball in their back yard is embracing as their very own — at least for this week.

This is the home of Valparaiso University, the tiny school (3,500 students) in northwest Indiana with a feel-good father-son story that's the talk of the NCAA tournament.

It started Friday when Bryce Drew, son of coach Homer Drew, hit a 3-pointer at the buzzer to upset Ole Miss in the opening round. On Sunday, the Crusaders beat Florida State in overtime.

And thus began their magical run toward the regional semifinals. Now the whole country is tagging along.

"People didn't even know who Valparaiso was," said Jamie Sykes, whose three-quarter court pass set up Drew's game-winning shot on Friday. "Now everyone wants to be part of what we are."

Before we go any further, it's Val-puh-RAISE-oh, not Val-puh-RISE-oh.

And if you can't imagine this team winning it all, think back to the movie "Hoosiers," with Homer Drew as Gene Hackman and Bryce as Jimmy Chitwood. Against all odds, Hackman coaches Hickory High to the state championship.

"It's about a small school having a dream," Bryce Drew said at Monday afternoon's raucous pep rally for the team.

He knows something about having a dream. As the 1994 Mr. Basketball in a state where basketball is practically a religion, he could have gone anywhere. Big-time schools like Stanford and Syracuse came calling.

So did his dad. And it just so happened that Bryce wanted to play in an NCAA tournament with his father on the bench. He also wanted to hit the game-winning shot that he'd been practicing in the back yard all his life and make a small school famous.

So he gave up the big names and the television time — the Mid-Continent Conference isn't exactly a big draw — and stayed in a place where loyalty and good deeds never go unrewarded.

"It's nice to see them have some success," said Eric McMullan, a clerk at BRQ Quickprint near the town's main square.

The players mingle in town like any other students, though they're more than happy to sign autographs.

"They're just regular guys, just like the guys you went to school with," said Lee Kleist, sales manager at B&E Honda, across the street from campus.

Valparaiso fans dance in the streets of the small Indiana town to welcome home their beloved Crusaders.

"Regular, down-to-earth guys. It's really good to see them go this far."

When the word got out that the players were returning to the Athletics-Recreation Center, or "The Arc" as its called, more than 1,500 people were there to greet them.

Even though the bus was almost two hours late, it took five minutes to clear the crowd and get the door open. As the players got off, they slapped hands with anyone who could get a hand near them.

The Valparaiso fans especially love coach Drew, who gets teary-eyed anytime someone asks him about how special it's been to coach his son. One fan even carried a sign that read, "Bobby who? Gene What? Homer for President."

"Oh my gosh. Wow," he said, shaking his head. "We were just overwhelmed with the amount of people. It was a wonderful, wonderful feeling."

Rhode Island? No problem. People are already thinking Final Four.

"In the Cinderella story, the clock struck midnight," said Aaron Thomason, a sophomore forward. "It ain't struck midnight yet. We're still dancing."

Divisional placement key for new Browns

Fellow Browns fans, If you have not heard already, it was recently announced that Cleveland will receive an expansion team for the 1999 season.

With the new stadium being built, things appear to be on solid ground. Now comes another problem.

Where is the National Football League going to put the Browns? In other words, what division will Cleveland compete in?

Going division by division, the following is what the Browns would face.

Remember, since the NFL doesn't know the meaning of the word geography, Cleveland could be placed anywhere.

They could go back the the AFC Central where they were before leaving in 1995. They would renew rivalries with both Cincinnati and Pittsburgh. But there is one thing I really don't like about the division.

Baltimore.

Owned by a scumbag named Art Modell, the Ravens are a bunch that I would not like to see twice in a season. The Central would not be my first choice.

The East? Well, this would be better than the Central. However, it would mean having to defeat coaching geniuses Bill Parcells of the New York Jets and Jimmy Johnson of Miami in order to make it to the playoffs. Add Drew Bledsoe and the gang at New England and we have a scary mix. I'd rather take my chances elsewhere.

The West? Now this might be a wise idea if one thing occurs: John Elway retires after the 1998 season, takes his Super Bowl XXXII ring and never shows his face again. In that case he can't lead anymore Bronco comebacks against the Browns. I've seen one too many of those.

Then Cleveland would just have to deal with Terrell Davis. How to contain Davis? Stack seven or eight guys in the box and tackle him low. He likes to run over defenders.

Take care of the Broncos and Kansas City and the Browns could win the division. The Chiefs haven't established a consistent starting quarterback so again it would be a matter of stopping the run.

As for San Diego, Oakland, and Seattle, they don't have much of a future with new coaches or quarterbacks every year. I especially wouldn't be concerned with the Raiders unless Al Davis retires because they change coaches every year. You can do that when you hire tools for coaches.

If all else fails, the Browns can move back to the NFC where they were in the 1950s. However, I would hate being in the Central. That is the toughest division in football. Put Cleveland there and they might be in the same position as Chicago.

That's especially true when Green Bay has gone to the Super Bowl the past two seasons, while Tampa Bay could win one within the next few years. Detroit has Barry and, well, Minnesota may be inconsistent, but they always find some way to make the playoffs.

The East? Again, this wouldn't be my first choice. The Giants are young and up-and-coming, while Philadelphia has Ray Rhodes. Washington is tough when Gus Ferrotte doesn't celebrate by breaking his neck against a brick wall. Dallas might be back since Barry Switzer is gone. Arizona, they may not win, but they do have hope in Jake "the Snake" Plummer.

The West? Well now, this might be the perfect division to enter. I consider it the weakest. For one thing, San Francisco is overrated. I don't care how good their record

BG floats to sixth at MAC meet

By MICHAEL LEONARD
The BG News

ATHENS -- The king is dead. Long live the king.

The knave is dead. May he rest in peace.

In one of the closest battles in Mid-American Conference history, Eastern Michigan edged out Toledo by six points to claim their 17th MAC Men's Swimming title in the last 18 years. Eight lead changes, including three on the final day, occurred before the Rockets lost the battle, 715-709.

Bowling Green men's swimming, meanwhile, is no longer the cellar-dweller of the MAC. The Falcons finished the MAC Championship in sixth place with a total of 262.5 points, 49 points ahead of last place Northern Illinois. The meet marked the first time since 1992 that the Falcons finished out of last place.

"This is something we can build on," said Falcon coach Randy Julian. "I was really proud of this group."

It was a total team effort for the Falcons as they climbed out of the last place slot. Senior Tom Stoltz had an off-and-on meet as he finished third in the 500-yard freestyle and in the top 10 in the mile.

A poor preliminary time in the morning, however, doomed Stoltz to the consolation finals of the 200-yard freestyle. Stoltz won the consols with a time that would have been good enough for third.

Sophomore Matt Johnson also had a decent meet. Johnson was touched out for first place in the 100-yard breaststroke. His preliminary time of 55.47, however, was enough to break both the BGSU and OU Aquatic center records.

Men's Swimming

Johnson also trimmed 11 seconds off his 200-yard individual medley time, but was regulated to 11th in the 200-yard breaststroke.

Two pleasant surprises for the Falcons came in the forms of seniors Bill Beecher and Steve Reinke. Swimming in their final meet, Reinke and Beecher reached the consolation finals in each of their events. Beecher also placed fourth in the 100 yard butterfly, making him the Falcons' second highest scorer behind Stoltz.

Freshmen Andy Jenkins and Bill Roehl also gave good showings. Jenkins finished 14th in the 50-yard freestyle, an event which has typically lacked Falcons. Jenkins also finished ninth in the 100-yard freestyle. Roehl finished 11th in the 100-yard backstroke and 14th in the 200-yard backstroke.

BG's 200-yard freestyle and medley relays both broke school records but did not challenge for the MAC title.

"Andy Jenkins caught our attention," Julian said. "We're really excited about what he can do for us over the next few years."

The big guns of the MAC shined over the weekend. Toledo's Dan Draeger was dominant in the sprint freestyle events, shattering three pool and one MAC record in the process. Draeger also qualified for the NCAA Championships in all of his events. For this, Draeger was named Swimmer of the Year. Ohio's Kacy Culver, champion at 3-meter diving, was named Diver of the Year.

Toledo claimed all of the MAC records broken this weekend with Draeger and the 200-yard medley, 400-yard medley, and 800-yard freestyle relays.

EMU's Mark Leonard dominated the distance freestyle with ease. Leonard won both the 50-yard and mile freestyles as he prepares to compete at NCAA Championships in two weeks.

EMU's Peter Linn was given Swimming Coach of the Year honors, while Ball State's John Euthower, coaching in his final meet before leaving for a coaching position with U.S. Diving, was given special recognition along with Diving Coach of the Year honors.

For the Falcons, the season is over for both teams; there are no BG qualifiers for NCAA Championships. The Falcons will begin spring training on March 30.

Miami men's basketball coach Charlie Coles (center) hugs RedHawks co-captain Wally Szczerbiak upon Coles' release from the hospital. Coles suffered a heart attack on Feb. 28 during Miami's quarterfinal game against Western Michigan. Coles' wife, Dolores, is at right.

Coles to coach after collapse

The Associated Press

OXFORD -- Miami University basketball coach Charlie Coles said Monday that despite the heart stoppage he suffered during a Feb. 28 game in Michigan, he expects to resume coaching this fall.

Coles, 56, said he will return to coaching the RedHawks because his doctors told him he should expect to be able to resume a normal life. He collapsed on the court during Miami's game at Western Michigan in Kalamazoo, Mich.

Coles said Monday that he would retire if he thought that he might suffer another cardiac arrest, because he doesn't want to put his family through another ordeal.

"If I thought this would happen again ... I would not coach, because it affects too many people," he told reporters at a Millett Hall news conference in his first public appearance since returning Sunday to Oxford.

Coles was hospitalized in Kalamazoo for eight days after his collapse.

He told reporters he still marvels at his good fortune in surviving. Doctors attending the Feb.

MAC teams go 2-6 in postseason

Six Mid-American Conference basketball teams, including the Bowling Green women, earned postseason bids. The Falcons were joined by Toledo in the Women's NIT, while Kent was the lone representative in the NCAA Tournament.

Western Michigan joined MAC Tournament champion Eastern Michigan in the Big Dance, while MAC Player of the Year Bonzi Wells led Ball State to an NIT berth.

The Broncos pulled off one of the major surprises of the NCAA Tournament, knocking off sixth-seeded Clemson before falling to No. 3 Stanford in the second round. Eastern succumbed in the first round to cross-state rival Michigan State.

Ball State fell in its opener to Memphis.

The Kent women gave Iowa State, headed up by former Toledo coach Bill Fennelly, all the Cyclones could handle in a 79-76 first-round ISU victory, while Toledo beat in-state foe Cincinnati before falling one point short of the WNIT Final Four, losing to Indiana, 61-60.

Butler defeated the Falcon women 95-90 at Anderson Arena on Friday night (see page nine).

28 game were among those who rushed to his aid.

"I just give thanks to God, to my family and to the people at Kalamazoo," Coles said. "They happened to have five doctors there at the game."

Tribe gives Perez another chance

The Associated Press

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. -- Melido Perez found that he could only get so much satisfaction from running a construction business and selling real estate.

Although his right arm has been a frequent construction site, Perez missed the feeling of standing on the mound, rocking into his windup and hurling pitches toward the plate.

Plenty of hard work -- and injuries to the Cleveland Indians' starting rotation -- have given him that chance.

"I feel good, better than I have in years," said Perez, attempting a comeback after shoulder problems and ligament replacement surgery on his pitching elbow. "Really, every time I pitch in a game, I feel better. I throw a lot of sliders and split-fingered pitches now and still no pain, so I am happy."

The Indians, who signed Perez to a minor league contract on Feb. 14, are happy he's around. While Bartolo Colon and Steve Karsay are the favorites to grab the two spots currently available in the starting rotation, Cleveland is a perfect example of the old theory that you can never have enough pitching.

Injuries to Ben McDonald (traded back to Milwaukee after shoulder surgery) and Chad Ogea (out 4-6 weeks following knee surgery) have given Perez another shot.

"The first time out, it felt really strange," Perez said. "I felt weird on the mound. I know I was out for a long time, but now I think I am back."

Perez, one of five brothers who have pitched in the majors, has shown signs he can get it done even after missing all of 1996 and 1997. He's only pitched 5 1-3 innings, allowing five earned runs, eight hits and five walks, but the Indians are looking beyond the numbers.

Cleveland scouts clocked Perez at 90-91 mph in the third inning last Friday, remarkable for a pitcher who had Tommy John ligament surgery in July, 1996.

"He has shown no hint of arm problems," Indians general manager John Hart said. "We'll keep extending him out and see what we have. He's competing for the fifth spot."

Perez is only 32, but he was assumed to be washed up. He dabbled in business, but found baseball's allure too strong.

"When you have five brothers in the family playing, you always follow the game," Perez said. "I follow the game, watch on television. But I wanted to play. It was killing me not to play."

"I have some little business at home and I spent a lot of time with my kids. I have a company that makes blocks used in construction and I do a little real estate, but I always want to play baseball."

Perez and brother Pascual both pitched for the New York Yankees. Carlos Perez pitches for the Montreal Expos; Vladimir, Dario and Valerio were all minor league pitchers.

While Melido has his quirks, he is nothing compared with, say, Pascual, who once drove around Atlanta's perimeter parkway for hours trying to find Fulton County Stadium. Carlos is known for his exuberant, nearly inexplicable punchout when he strikes out a batter.

Perez says he feels as if he's lost some velocity. But he was surprised that his rebuilt arm can somehow throw a better, tighter slider than before. He's been throwing a split-fingered fastball without pain.

Still, he is a longshot to leapfrog Colon or Karsay onto the opening day roster. When he signed Perez, Hart told his agent that the right-hander may have to start the season at Triple-A. The GM thinks Perez will oblige.

"I'd be mildly surprised if he can help us after spring training at the beginning of the season," manager Mike Hargrove said. "He's 15 months post-surgery, but he's had a lot of success as a big league pitcher."

Wheaties tabs Tiger Woods

The Associated Press

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. -- Tiger Woods, whose face already is on everything from billboards to magazine covers, now will grace American breakfast tables.

Woods on Monday became just the eighth permanent spokesman in the nearly 75-year history of Wheaties -- the breakfast cereal pitched as the "breakfast of champions."

Wheaties will carry three cereal box covers showing Woods swinging an iron, holding his putter in the air and carrying a trophy.

"This, in a sense, is like being part of a Hall of Fame kind of crowd," said Woods.

Woods was joined at an announcement by past Wheaties endorsers Walter Payton, Bruce Jenner and Mary Lou Retton.

Woods joins an elite list of legendary American athletes who have been Wheaties' spokesmen. They include baseball's Pete Rose; tennis' Chris Evert Lloyd; basketball's Michael Jordan; football's Payton; and former Olympians Bob Richards, Jenner and Retton.

"What's kind of cool is that golf is now considered an athletic sport," Woods said. "I was always called a 'wuss' for playing golf, but I'm here."

While dozens of other athletes and sports teams have appeared on the front of the cereal box, a spokesman's role is more involved and consists of commercials and public appearances.

The association with the cereal generally lasts a lifetime, said Bart Reed, Wheaties' marketing manager. "Anyone who enters the Wheaties' family is always a member," he said.

The details of Woods' contract weren't disclosed. A source told The Associated Press on Friday that Woods will be paid by General Mills through contributions to the Tiger Woods Foundation, which helps minority youth get involved in golf.

GRAHAM

was last year. Atlanta is Atlanta. Bad. St. Louis? Nah, no running game. Carolina? They only had one good year in them.

New Orleans might be my only concern in this division. Mike Ditka is my reasoning. The team took some baby steps last year and can only grow from here.

So, get by the Saints and the division is won.

All in all, if I had my way I'd place the Browns in the NFC West. It would mean long trips around the country, but would be worthwhile in helping the Browns earn home-field advantage for the playoffs en route to an eventual Super Bowl.

Now doesn't that sound great!

In 1999, go Browns. Woof!

Sports Briefs

Fresno president upset with CBS

FRESNO, Calif. -- The president of Fresno State thinks "60 Minutes" acted unfairly in its report on problems with the university's basketball team.

The report, broadcast by CBS on Sunday night, reviewed the team's drug and assault suspensions this season. Eight of the team's 10 scholarship players have missed games because they were suspended, ineligible, in rehab or quit.

Coach Jerry Tarkanian, interviewed by Mike Wallace, said he is proud of his policy of giving youngsters a second chance.

"I think it's wonderful that there are people out there that help you through this time and give you an opportunity to be successful," Tarkanian said on the broadcast.

Indians ship prospects to minors

LAKELAND, Fla. -- Two of the Cleveland Indians' top hitting prospects, Russell Branyan and Richie Sexson, were optioned to the minors on Monday.

Branyan, who led the minors last year with 39 homers and drove in 105 runs, was batting .313 with one homer and two RBIs in 11 spring training games. The 22-year-old is the Indians' third baseman of the future, but needs more seasoning in the minors. He was optioned to Double-A Akron.

Sexson, 23, a 6-7 first baseman, will play left field at Triple-A this season. The Indians want Sexson to learn the position because Jim Thome has first base anchored for several years to come.

Cleveland also optioned right-handed pitcher Jason Rakers to Double-A and outfielder Bruce Aven to Triple-A. Catcher Heath Hayes was reassigned to minor league camp, reducing the spring training roster to 41.

Nicklaus to play U.S. Open; continue streak

NEW YORK -- Jack Nicklaus can play in the U.S. Open, after all. The USGA on Monday gave Nicklaus special exemptions for the next three tournaments through the year 2000.

When Nicklaus was not among those given exemptions by the USGA in January it appeared his streak of consecutive major championship would end at 145 after this year's Masters.

Now Nicklaus can extend that streak through the 2001 Masters, if he chooses, pushing it to 157 consecutive major championships. He has lifetime invitations to the Masters and the PGA Championship and can play the British Open until he is 65.

USOC wants more than apology, money

The Associated Press

An apology and $3,000 check from the American men's hockey team is not enough to settle the case of trashed rooms at the Winter Olympics, the U.S. Olympic Committee's top officials said Monday.

USOC executive director Dick Schultz and president Bill Hybl said they still hoped for individual apologies from the two or three players believed involved in the vandalism at the athletes' village almost a month ago.

"I think it's a step in the right direction but it doesn't settle the situation," Schultz said. "I'd still prefer to receive apologies from the individuals directly involved."

Hybl, sounding a bit more conciliatory, said he also would like to receive individual apologies but was more interested in a "concerted effort to support sports" from the team members, perhaps in the form of payment to youth athletics.

Last Friday, U.S. team captain Chris Chelios sent an apology and a $3,000 check to Japanese Olympic officials for the damage teammates caused to their rooms after losing to the Czech Republic. The damages already had been paid by the USOC and NHL.

"Certain conduct by a few members of our team ... was inexcusable," said Chelios, who plays for the Chicago Blackhawks. "I want to take this opportunity to apologize to the people of Japan, the Japanese Olympic committee, the USOC, and to all hockey fans throughout the world."

Chelios, who has denied causing any damage and said he was cleared of wrongdoing, said the check was meant to cover damages to three rooms at Nagano's Olympic Village. Ten chairs were broken and the walls were damaged by a fire extinguisher on Feb. 18.

Schultz and Hybl said last week they would pursue the case after the NHL announced its investigation had failed to pinpoint the players responsible.

While saying they wanted an apology, the USOC leaders also stressed they held over options.

The biggest threat to depression is your awareness of it.

Serious depression strikes millions. Serious depression strikes indiscriminately. Serious depression is MOST dangerous when it goes unrecognized. That's why it's so important to always be aware of the threat of depression. And if your life is ever interrupted by a period of depression, remember that it is readily, medically treatable.
